Micro-Pellet Chips

Micro-pellets are highly functional semi-finished products obtained by gelatinizing specially selected cereal and legume flours using advanced extrusion technology and shaping them into micro-dimensions. This technology preserves the natural nutritional value of the raw materials while providing them with a standardized physical form and controlled processing characteristics. Naturally, ingredients like lentils, potatoes, peas, beets, and spinach do not puff or pop on their own. However, through the micro-pellet processing method, lentils and similar ingredients are transformed into a poppable form, achieving a structure that can be puffed under controlled heat and pressure.
